

Geriatric Care Management

Old Age Doesn't Have to Come Alone!

The face of the world is rapidly changing. Soon the United States "will have more older people than children and more people at extreme old age than ever before."¹ According to the CDC's most recent report, The state of Aging in America 2013, "longer life spans and aging baby boomers—will combine to double the population of Americans aged 65 years or older during the next 25 years to about 72 million."² Greater than 25% of all Americans, and 2/3 of older Americans are facing chronic health conditions.² Facing these and other related challenges can seem daunting, or even impossible at times. Having a trusted helping professional on your team, like David Hage, MSW, LSW, C-ASWCM, CRMT II, an experienced geriatric care manager who can guide you through many of these transitions and challenges can relieve a great deal of stress for older adults and their families.

"David Hage, was able to provide a road map of the resources available through each step of the decline of my parents' health and their increased need for assistance. I am grateful for the invaluable support."

Jean Steelman, Ph.D., C.N.S.
